Revoke the Dead?

In a, let's be honest with ourselves, predictable move, the Mafia Champions opened Day 1 of Season 200X by attempting to circumvent the rules in any way possible. The Canada Moist Talkers suggested the League abstain from voting, and the Dallas Steaks cooked up a plan to Revoke the Deceased Toronto Condominiums. A Message from Ownership confirmed the invalidity of any votes for Deceased Teams quickly proving the plan to be all sizzle and no steak.

A Sole Read

In Weather, the recently installed Sun Block has been protecting our favourite Teams and Players from the harmful effects of Suns during the Night by Eclipsing any and all Suns or Celestial Objects. The Debted Teams have taken full Advantage of the situation to help Repay their Debts. The Charleston Shoe Thieves were Ready and Willing to protect other Teams using their Fire Protector Mod, allowing them to be Incinerated instead of an Unstable Team, however the Shoe Thieves let the fact they had a Mod slip and were promptly struck down by the Debted Teams.

Beams.txt to Victory Speech

Rumours that the Hellmouth Sunbeams were “Sus” Reverberated through the Town Square on Day 2. Staring down their accusers the Sunbeams Forged a new Message, bringing “message.txt” to the Masses. Despite a Ratings spike and creating widespread Laughter the League continued to Desert them, and the Hellmouth Sunbeams became the first Team to be Revoked. But the Hellmouth Sunbeams had the last Laugh when it was Revealed they were Early to the Party, a Mod that causes a Team to Win upon being Revoked. Their Victory proved why we should Never Estimate the Beams.

Swept Up

All That Glitter Weather wasn’t Gold when Day 3 began, the Mexico City Wild Wings had been Incinerated during the previous night leaving behind a Leadership void, and Revealing the existence of Elsewhere; a Location where Elsewhere Teams can communicate privately during the Night. The Chicago Firefighters came forward to claim Membership, followed by the Tokyo Lift, and finally the New York Millennials.
